Q: How do I take a string of digits and use them as the value for a record? How do I take a string of digits and use them as the value for a record? For example, if I have a function that returns a string, but that string of digits can be used as the value for a record

def myfunc(x): return "".join(x)

Now, what is the easiest way to take that string and use it as the value for a record? Maybe something like this

def myfunc(x): return "".join(x)
myRec = type(myfunc("012345"))
print(myRec.__repr__()) # {'x': '012345'}

A: You just have to add a `__repr__` method to your custom class to take its own representation as the return value. In your case you can write `class your_type(object):`

`def __repr__(self): return self.x` and you'll get `>>> your_type('012345') {'x': '012345'}`
Note that if you want to do the same thing with a tuple, you need to use `repr` instead of `__repr__`: `>>> tuple('012345') ('012345')`
The difference is that `repr` also works with non-tuple objects and instances of `str`: `>>> str('012345')`
